GARDEN UPDATE: June

BY JOE PAPENDICK, GARDEN MANAGER, BOISSET COLLECTION

Approaching the longest day of the year, plants express their gratitude for the sunshine. The garden reaches to the sky. Pole beans vine upward, sunflowers tower above, tomatoes need additional supports and fruit begins to blush. Every season has its rewards and June marks the beginning of the summer harvest. Cherries and the first of the peaches are a welcomed sight.

“In California’s dry summer, the success of the garden relies on the efficiency of the irrigation system.”

The new summer squash is always exciting to see and the cucumbers cool and refresh after the heat of the day.

The summer crops fill out with broad leaves and most of the garden is planted.

In California’s dry summer, the success of the garden relies on the efficiency of the irrigation system. Regular monitoring and maintaining of the drip lines, emitters and sprinklers is important. There is an art to watering too. The goal is to bring the soil up to saturation and then let it dry out. Too much water and the plants drown without air and the life within the soil food web dies and the soil compacts. Too little water and the plants suffer. Within the garden are variations in the soil and drainage, which creates unique watering challenges. The irrigation system is set to cover the average of the plants’ and soil’s water requirements, but during a heat wave additional water may be necessary for some beds and crops. After tending to the garden over the years, I’ve come to notice that as the crops are rotated through different garden locations each year, some beds produce tastier lettuce, while others produce better for tomatoes!

CHEF’S CORNER: FOOD & WINE

MUSHROOM RISOTTO

Recipe created by Atelier Fine Foods and Catering

Pairs well with the 2014 Buena Vista Bela’s Pinot Noir, Russian River Valley

Ingredients:

Mushrooms:

- 2 oz. dried porcini mushrooms
- 11/2 lb shiitake, chanterelle or button mushrooms, sliced
- 4 T butter
- 4-5 large shallots, peeled & minced
- 2 large garlic cloves, peeled & minced
- Kosher salt & pepper to taste
- 1 lemon, juiced

Rice:

- 11-12 cups vegetable stock (including mushroom stock)
- 3 T butter
- 1 large yellow onion, peeled & minced
- 3 c Arborio rice
- 1 c white wine
- 1/3 c parsley, chopped
- 1 c Parmesan cheese, freshly grated
- Kosher salt & pepper to taste

Directions:

Soak the dried porcini in 2 c hot water for 30 minutes. Drain, reserving liquid to add to vegetable stock. Finely chop mushrooms & set aside. Melt butter in large skillet, add garlic & shallots & cook 5 minutes over medium heat, stirring. Turn up heat, add fresh mushrooms & sauté until golden. Remove from heat, sprinkle with lemon juice & season to taste.

Pour vegetable/mushroom stock into saucepan and heat to simmer. Heat butter in large, heavy soup pot, add onion & cook until translucent, about 5 minutes. Add rice & toss until coated with butter & lightly toasted. Add dried mushrooms & wine & cook until liquid is absorbed. Add 2 cups stock & cook over medium heat until liquid is absorbed. Add remaining stock in 1/2 c increments, stirring until liquid is absorbed before adding more. Continue until rice is cooked al dente. Stir in sautéed mushrooms, parmesan & parsley. Add more butter if desired and season with salt & pepper.
